The Lanos was designated the T100 model code at launch; the T150 code applies to the updated models introduced in 1999. In 2006, a panel van version, developed in Ukraine by ZAZ, was also introduced. The Daewoo Lanos was designed to replace the Daewoo Nexia in the Daewoo lineup and was itself replaced by the Daewoo Kalos. Four design studios were commissioned to deliver clay models presenting their ideas for the new models styling. Giorgetto Giugiaro's design was chosen, and Italdesign was commissioned to develop the car's final outside and interior styling. The technical side of the project was conducted simultaneously by Daewoo's development centre in Korea, as well as suppliers and contractors who were involved in developing particular components. The development programme involved extensive testing in a multitude of locations. Safety tests included high-speed stability and durability testing in England, and brake testing on the Groglockner in Austria. Low-temperature testing was conducted in Canada, Sweden Arjeplog, and Russia Moscow, Khabarovsk while high-temperature tests took place in the US Death Valley, Oman Nizwa, Australia Alice Springs, Spain Barcelona, and Italy Nardo. The programme was completed in a remarkable time of only 30 months from the approval to the commencement of large-scale production of the Lanos sedan for the Korean market. Differences between the 1.6 DOHC engine version and the other versions were: The S was the base model and did not include many standard features like a CD player or power windows. The SE was just a small step up from the S base model. However, the SX model usually included a CD, radio, and cassette player along with power windows, a power side mirror, and fog lights. A few select SX models even came with a sunroof, though not many did. Also, the SPORT model had window controls located on the doors rather than the center console like in the previous trim lines.

Most of the initial production was made using complete knock-down CKD kits, which were supplied to FSO in Poland, ZAZ in Ukraine, TagAZ in Russia, Daewoo Motors Egypt and GM Egypt in Egypt and VIDAMCO in Vietnam. Since January 2005, after the takeover of Daewoo by General Motors, the Lanos produced in Poland started to be sold under the brand name of FSO. It was produced until 2008, but only with the pre-facelift external design. An SE version came with all the options plus the manual transmission. Daewoo ceased operations in North America. After GM took over Daewoo to become GM DAT, Chevrolet began importing the Daewoo Kalos, rebadged as the Aveo, to North America beginning with MY 2004. However, the Lanos continues to be sold in Mexico and Latin America. Russian magazine Autoreview tested LHD Chevrolet Lanos T150 sedan built by ZAZ in 2006. Retrieved 19 July 2010.
